MISS LADENBURG

James Brady is Arraigned, Charged with Attack on Little Miss Ladenburg.

MOTHER LEADS SEARCH

By Boston American Special Wire.
NEW YORK, Oct. 8.—A man whom the police registered as James Brady was arrested today at the Yorkville police station, charged with the attempted abduction of Miss Rebecca Maria Ladenburg, daughter of Mrs. Adolph Ladenburg, of Hingham, Mass., and the Londoning country home at Westbury, L. I.

Miss Ladenburg, who on views which she herself had formed out, has taken personal charge of the hunt for the man who tried to kidnap her daughter.

She prosecuted the detective work so vigorously that one suspect was traced to this city, and private detectives are searching from her home in a house at 67 West 100th St.

In an automobile with two detectives, Mrs. Ladenburg drove to the home of her neighbor and friend, Mrs. Thomas Hitchcock, Jr., who had also been led by a man at about the same spot where the abduction of Miss Ladenburg took place.

Mrs. Hitchcock was only able to aid Mrs. Ladenburg in a general way and the latter then set out to locate the vehicle used by the would-be kidnappers. She learned that an employee had been discharged on Friday, the day of the attack, and Mrs. Ladenburg, who heard that he had been seen at the same place, set out to find him.

Another theory which Mrs. Ladenburg has evolved as the result of her investigation is that the two men who attacked her daughter are members of the band of thieves who recently turned Nassau court in an automobile, blowing safe and robbing homes and spreading terror all over the country.

She learned that one of the men was the son of a wealthy man who had been captured of the guilty persons. There was a disposition at first to believe that the man was a part of the attack, on the basis that the man were probably a man who was after money, but investigation has proven that the man were familiar with the country and the home of the wealthy man, and had deliberately waited for and followed the young girl to a spot selected to attack her and seize her away.

He always pops the question when I have had some bit of good luck, sold a story or a poem, or have a new dream, and feel strong and brave and full of life. He knows the way and full of the intoxication of woman's independence. Then I say 'No.'"

"But if he would only propose some day when my stories have some holes in them, or when I am sitting on the windowsill, I asked, at the very thought of a frosty tale of hate dream, and I want nothing else on earth so badly as a good, broad masculine shoulder to flop against. I would say yes. I would say yes. I would say 'Yes.' Sometimes he'll hit the right moment by accident, and then I'll be a ponz."

"That's all I've got to say to you at present, and we don't wish to waste here. Only, don't forget; you're watched!" he repeated significantly.

He was hurried from the store at the door by a police round.

He saw Mrs. Rumdit shaking her skinny fist at her with considerable feeling.
